

How to Talk to Your Kids About Cyberbullying

More than 75% of tween and teens experienced cyberbullying in 2019, either as a victim, bully, or witness. Because it can happen to any child, here are some facts that can help you start a conversation about cyberbullying with your kids.

50% of young gamers experience cyberbullying while playing online.

Cyberbullying victims are more likely to consider suicide than their peers.

Only 11% of teens talk to their parents about incidents of cyberbullying.

Common types of cyberbullying include harassment, trolling, exclusion, doxxing, and masquerading.

There's no federal law against cyberbullying, but many states cover cyberbullying in their anti-bullying laws.

Warning signs include being secretive, getting emotional while on their phone, and avoiding discussions of online activity.

